

Greetings from the American Consulate General in Munich.

In this quarter's newsletter, we provide timely information on Overseas Voting procedures and Avian Influenza. It is hard to believe that the election season has almost arrived, but the first Presidential Primary will be held on January 8th in the District of Columbia. In the lead up to this fast approaching election season, the Munich Consulate is ready to assist Americans in registering to vote and in providing information on how to cast their ballot. Please visit our website at HTTP://MUNICH.USCONSULATE.GOV for more information on how we can help you to vote in the coming elections.

Americans in Bavaria should also be aware that Avian Influenza has been detected in Bavaria and that everyone should avoid close contact with live birds. Finally, the recent arrests in Germany of three suspects planning terrorist attacks are a reminder of the continuing importance of a high level of security consciousness and awareness by all citizens. For further information please review the Consular Information Sheet for Germany at http://www.travel.state.gov/travel/cis_pa_tw/cis/cis_1123.html as well as Consular Information Sheets for any country you are planning to visit at www.travel.state.gov.

Don't forget to mark you calendars for the American Citizen's Information Night Open House to be held October 29, 2007 at the Consulate General Munich. Hope to see you there!

AMERICAN CITIZEN NEWS

A Primer on Overseas Voting

Voting. There is possibly no civil right Americans cherish more than their right to vote; there have been five separate amendments to the U.S. Constitution addressing voting rights. As the most recent presidential elections have proved, every vote counts. Americans living overseas have an equal right to vote in federal elections, but it requires a few extra steps. Since, by some estimates, as many as 20% of absentee ballots are rejected, it's vital that expatriates understand those steps.

Register to Vote: Each state has its own rules and policies for voter registration, with special requirements for Americans living overseas. There are different rules for members of the uniformed services, and for civilians in some states. The simplest way to find out what your state's specific requirements are is to go to www.fvap.gov and find the link for your state. Many states now offer on-line voter registration verification, so you can check to see if a previous registration is still valid. Federal law requires states keep voters on the registration rolls for two federal election cycles (four years), but it's never wise to assume that you're still registered.

The Federal Post Card Application (FPCA) can be used to register and/or request an absentee ballot. Every state now accepts the on-line version of the form, or has its own version available on line. You may also request the postcard version of the form from the Embassy or Consulate in your district.

An informal poll conducted by Overseas Vote Foundation showed that problems with voter registration were the largest contributor to ballots being received too late, or not at all. The critical elements to using the on-line or federal post card registration form:

- Follow your state's specific instructions, and provide all the information requested.
- Write legibly.
- Sign and date the form.
- Mail it to the correct address.
- Include your current mailing address.

Request an Absentee Ballot: Another faulty assumption is that, just because you're registered, you'll automatically receive absentee ballots. Most states require a request to the voter's local Supervisor of Elections. In some states, all this takes is a phone call or email request if you're already registered; others require a written, notarized document. The Consular staff at the Berlin Embassy, the Consulates in Munich and Frankfurt, and the Consular Agent in Bremen can notarize these requests for free – normal Consular fees are waived for election materials.

Voting by Citizens Who Have Never Lived in the United States: Many states have provisions for this contingency, and allow voters to register if a parent or a spouse is eligible to vote in the state. Some of those states restrict voter registration to only federal elections. Again, the www.fvap.gov website has a special section concerning this topic, with links to the states with that provision.

Vote: When you receive your balloting materials, read the instructions carefully to make sure your ballot isn't discarded on a technicality. Return the ballot by mail, by your state's deadlines.

Worst case: If you've registered and requested balloting materials within your state's time limits, but haven't received your balloting materials within 30 days of the election, you may still vote in federal elections, using the “Federal Write-in Absentee Ballot for General Elections.” This form is also available on line, or from the Embassy or Consulates. Complete instructions are on the form.

Mail Your Ballot: You may mail your ballot from your home here in Germany, using the international postal system, or at no cost through the Top of the Document Embassy or Consulate’s postal system. Again, it’s important to check your state’s individual deadline requirements, and to make sure you mail your ballot arrives in time. You can even enclose your completed, sealed ballot in a German envelope with appropriate in-country postage and send it to us; we’ll put it in the U.S. postal system for you. If the ballot envelope is not marked 'postage paid', please make sure you have the appropriate U.S. stamp on the envelope.

Consular Officers’ Role: As previously mentioned, we’ll notarize your documents for you for free, if your state requires it. If you don’t have access to a printer or you’re a resident of American Samoa or Guam (these two territories don’t accept the on-line form), please call or email your district’s Consular staff. We’ll be happy to mail you the Federal Post Card Application for Registration and Absentee Ballot Request. And, we can send your ballots to the United States, using our postal system.

Other Expatriate Resources in Germany and on-line: For Americans who like to be active in party politics at the grass root level, there are branches of the Republican and Democratic parties in Germany. You can find more information at www.republicansabroad.org and/or www.democratsabroad.org. Younger voters and older teens might find the information at www.RocktheVote.com appealing and informative.

Avian Influenza Information

Avian Influenza, or Bird Flu, has been a concern of world travelers for several years. Diseased birds have been found in many Asian countries, and the virus has spread to 13 countries in the European Union. The German authorities have confirmed outbreaks of Bird Flu in southern and eastern parts of the country over the past several months, and are actively working to contain the problem. No human cases of Bird Flu have been reported in the EU, but caution is still warranted, since it’s a very virulent form of influenza, and the mortality rate is quite high. And, of course, since many people living in Germany often travel to countries with widespread outbreaks, it’s important to be aware of the risks, and the best ways to avoid becoming infected.

According to data from the World Health Organization (WHO) and other government agencies, the virus is primarily transmitted through direct contact with diseased birds, or poor hygiene or cooking methods by individuals who handled diseased poultry. To date, no cases of Bird Flu have been caused by properly cooked poultry and only a very few from close proximity to an infected person. Neither the State Department nor the WHO have issued travel alerts or warnings because of Bird Flu in any specific country or area, however, health authorities do advise travelers to be careful when traveling to countries with outbreaks in general, and to be particularly cautious of food containing raw eggs in countries with Bird Flu outbreaks in domestic poultry flocks.

It’s relatively simple to minimize your risk of exposure. Simply put, don’t physically handle wild birds, and pay particular attention to good hygiene and proper handling while cooking any poultry products.

The State Department has published a comprehensive “Avian Flu Fact Sheet”, which can be found here.

Driving in Germany

One of the most obvious differences between living in the United States and Germany is driving – it's simply different here. The only difference isn't just the speed on the autobahns. Many of the traffic rules and practices – particularly the right of way! – vary considerably from U.S. norms. The laws are also different – for example, driving with an expired license can land you in jail. Traffic accidents are the single biggest health hazard Americans encounter overseas, so it pays to understand the differences. Do you, for example, know the answers to these two questions?

- A driver wants to leave a private driveway and turn right onto a public road. At the same time, a bicyclist is approaching from the left. Who has to wait?
- When a streetcar comes up behind a driver's vehicle while the driver is waiting to make a left turn, what must the driver do?

It also pays to understand the signs, since violating them can earn you an expensive ticket or repair bill! Examples:

- What sign indicates the beginning of a 50 kilometer speed zone in a city?

- True or false: In the city where no priority signs are posted, the driver on the widest street has the right-of-way.

If you're uncertain of the answers to any of these questions, there are several web sites that can help you. Click Driving in Germany to connect to the U.S. Embassy – Germany's web page that addresses general driving tips and differences, as well as insurance, inspection and registration requirements. For a more comprehensive guide, complete with pictures of all the road signs and their meanings and a quiz to test your own knowledge, take a look at the publication issued by the U.S. military forces in Europe for the service and family members. The first section of the pamphlet discusses military-specific concerns, but the second section provides a thorough explanation of the legal and practical differences in the two systems. The test section includes graphic "who has the right of way" questions that we think are particularly helpful in clearing up many very confusing situations. To find the publication on line, click Army in Europe Pamphlet 190-34. Alternatively, if you're just curious about what some of those signs mean, simply type "German road signs" into your favorite search engine on line to find the answers.

Intercountry Adoption

We often receive inquiries from American citizens living in Germany who wish to adopt a child, either here in Germany or farther abroad, in places as far as Russia, Kazakhstan, and China. The best place to start for Americans interested in adopting a foreign-born child is www.travel.state.gov. The Office of Children's Issues maintains a web page with a wealth of information on intercountry adoption and provides links to the other U.S. Government agencies that also assists adoptive parents. Click here for the State Department's Intercountry Adoption web page for a general overview on the issue and links that will take you to the detailed country information pages. If you're interested in adopting a child in Germany, click here for the German Intercountry Adoption Information page. If you've adopted a foreign-born child (or are planning to in the near future) and you're returning to the United States with your new family member, click here for the U.S. Customs and Immigration Service's information page on intercountry adoptions, and immigration requirements.
